

Participants needed for research into entrepreneurial leadership patterns during Covid-19

Are you a business owner/ entrepreneurial leader in South Africa that has led your business through the Covid-19 crisis successfully so far?

Source: www.pexels.com

Sandy Geyer, founder of EnQPractice is an entrepreneurial leader and works professionally in the area of entrepreneurial leadership and student leadership. She is currently engaged in a doctoral research study of professional practice with Capable NZ, at Otago Polytechnic in New Zealand.

This is an invitation to participate in her study in South Africa which aims to identify and understand currently successful entrepreneurial leadership competencies, with a view to better preparing our future entrepreneurial and enterprise leaders with these competencies.

Whilst it is understandable that many in entrepreneurial leadership are feeling fatigued and possibly quite fragile through the Covid-19 crisis - there are two very good reasons to participate in this research study which will take between 10-20 minutes.

Firstly, your time collectively on this study will provide a depth of data that will help future leaders in South Africa to cope better with the challenges that might lie ahead for them; and secondly, as a participant you can request a copy of the research results which could be insightful and helpful to your own business leadership journey.

Participation is completely anonymous and any volunteered e-mail addresses will be used only for the specifically authorised purpose.

To participate in the research, go to <https://tinyurl.com/OPEntrep>.

For more, visit: <https://www.bizcommunity.com>