

Influencer marketing bubble isn't about to blow off anytime soon

By Rirhandzu Shingwenyana

23 Jun 2020

There was a time in the business world, where the internet economy was the only thing economist talked about. The stock market was growing exponentially. An era that would later be called the dot.com. In early 2000, the internet and the rise of Silicon Valley in America were once the most important proponent of the entire world. The excitement of the business of the internet would become what is today known as the dot.com bubble which later in busted.

Photo by Plann from Pexels.

Similarly, influencer marketing has seen a meteorite growth in recent years. Its deserving growth is because of the penetration of social media and digital marketing. Although there are resounding beliefs that influencer marketing is a bubble that is going to blow off anytime soon. Some believe this sentiment, and others think this form of marketing is here to stay. Thus many brands have become comfortable using it as part of their marketing and promoting strategy.

Hence, in recent years, have seen more and more brands sought celebrates to promote their products as influencers to influence customers and consumers to buy their products. And some brands succeeding, and some failed. Despite the connotation negative that influencer marketing is carrying for the failure of some brands. It is still an effective way of marketing and promoting brands and products.

A new dawn for influencer marketing in SA is upon us

Zubeida Goolam 20 May 2020

Influencer marketing like any other form of marketing has to be researched and planned properly. Many brands fail in the research stage, hence sometimes there is a mismatch of the influencer and the brand. Simply put, the influencer's social media content and followers do not complement the brand's ethos. Consequently, campaigns fall flat, followers do not convert, and instead they experience dissonance.

What is important with influencer marketing is to understand the pros and cons:

- Apply your due diligence when selecting the Influencer for your campaign
- Understand your customer to pick the right influencer
- And decide on the aim (s) for your campaign
- Set metrics for the influencer.
- Must agree as to who is going to create content. Would you use your copywriter and designer, or the influencer will freestyle and then get your approval before posting?
- All these must be ironed out.

The 3 key trends that will shape influencer marketing in a post-Covid-19 era

Gbenga Sogbaike 26 May 2020

Remember where your brand is concerned, whatever happens, it's your brand equity which will be impacted in a whether positive or negative way. Therefore, the above steps are all important for both the brand reputation and the aim of the campaign's success.

ABOUT RIRHANDZU SHINGWENYANA

Rirhandzu Shingwenyana is a marketing, advertising and communications professional with experience in account management, social media and digital marketing campaign management.

- The rise of digital marketing: Assessing the impact of AI and machine learning on advertising practices - 5 Jun 2023
- Lets ramp up the value of digital marketing - 7 Mar 2023
- Bathu: more than just a shoe - 1 Nov 2022
- Communicating effectively through content marketing - 4 Oct 2022
- Marketing is the science of data and creativity - 13 Sep 2022

View my profile and articles...

For more, visit: <https://www.bizcommunity.com>