

Innovation and creativity in the time of Covid-19: Alternative ways of thinking and doing

 By Shaune Jordaan

26 Mar 2020

Coronavirus is, arguably, like nothing we've experienced in recent history. It's both remarkable and scary, and we'll be talking about it for decades to come. The internet and social media, which make information readily available in a scenario completely at odds with our reality 25 years ago, are meanwhile feeding rather than quelling the global state of panic.

Credit: Bench Accounting on Uhsplash.com

Conversely, however, we would not have been able to respond as proactively as has been the case to date if it were not for the fact that we do have these tools at our disposal.

At Hoorah Digital, we have adapted quickly and smartly, putting in the necessary effort in order to understand how to best cope with the situation at hand. Here are some key findings and learnings:

Ways of working

Remote working can be fantastic. There are so many tools and resources that allow for this, so employees can continue functioning as a team. Most of our work happens in the Cloud through the Google Business suite. This means everything is accessible, almost like a virtual warehouse, to everyone, irrespective of their location. Could this new way of working mean we finally uncouple desk occupancy from productivity?

Moving forward with technology

Business cannot freeze in the face of fear. At the most fundamental level, the ability to adapt and progress is what defines a sustainable, successful business. Where possible, we need to use the technology at our disposal to weather the storm, so finding new ways to sustain ourselves in these uncertain times and into the future.

We should view the lockdown as an invitation to innovate – as entrepreneurs we are also problem solvers, and there is plenty of solving that needs doing. As long as we remain connected, however, we can find ways of working together to find solutions, to build more resilient systems and perhaps even to redefine the fundamentals of how we do business.

Take comfort in the fact that history shows us that business always finds a way. Humans always find a way. Our adaptability and resilience is our great strength.

Seek opportunity in chaos

The world feels chaotic right now, but the great Chinese strategist and philosopher Sun Tzu reminds us in The Art of War that:

“ In the midst of chaos, there is also opportunity. ”

What if we use this time to rethink our beliefs, particularly about consumption, conservation and creativity? What if we open our minds to the possibility of emerging from coronavirus as a society that is better equipped for an uncertain future, as nations with serious regard for the long-term impact of climate change, as communities who rethink our values in relation to what benefits the common good?

We don't know what opportunities will come of this, but let's remain open to the possibilities.

Importantly, we need to find ways to keep working – because there's no other choice. We cannot allow panic to prevent us from making progress. It's true that that “progress” may be redefined over the coming months, but we should embrace that. Humans, more than any other species, change; we make, we innovate, we reinvent ourselves.

Our challenge here – no, make it our goal – is to change for the better. Let's approach Covid-19 as our generation's opportunity to redefine how we think about our place in the world, particularly in respect of how we do business and the consequent impact on our environment.

ABOUT SHAUNE JORDAAN

Shaune Jordaan is the co-founder and chief commercial officer at Hoorah Digital. He is passionate about delivering world class results to brands and building a digital culture that drives change. He is the former co-founder/CEO of an award winning performance digital agency with an extensive global client list. He's worked extensively across the globe, growing digital portfolios and leading digital transformation. He is one of Africa's most experienced digital leaders.

- Game on: The next big brand opportunity to embrace - 13 May 2021
- Welcome to extended reality or XR - 26 Apr 2021
- Organisations need to prioritise data to tell meaningful stories - 18 Nov 2020
- Innovation and creativity in the time of Covid-19: Alternative ways of thinking and doing - 26 Mar 2020
- Recession hit your marketing budget? Here's how to do more with less - 25 Sep 2018

View my profile and articles...

For more, visit: <https://www.bizcommunity.com>