

Springbok Nude Girls make comeback with new single, live shows

The Springbok Nude Girls are making a comeback with a new single, "Rolling Thunder", and with two live and streaming performances.

As one of South Africa's most decorated and applauded bands of the last 20+ plus years, Springbok Nude Girls' work ethic has never-ever wavered. "Rolling Thunder" is audible proof of that. Since the release of their 2018 singles "Beautiful Evolution", "Best Friends, Best Enemies", the making of this stellar return showcases the group's perpetual evolution and maturity, all without compromising a beat.

Producer and lead guitarist Theo Crous explains the journey. "Previous Nude Girls recordings for me, never truly reflected how the band came across as a live act. "Rolling Thunder", for me, encapsulates the Nude Girls sound as a live act. I tried to approach the production and the mix specifically how the band performs live.

"Examples of this are how I panned the band as they are positioned on stage," he adds. "I enhanced Arno's lead vocal delay effects in a way I thought he would use it with his pedal on stage. I kept the drum reverb to a minimum and only used it mostly in the choruses while steering away from using drum samples."

Without the pressure from a major record label to create music within corporate deadlines and budgets, the band was able to let the music and release plan happen without distraction where the outcome is pure, high-octane organic wall of signature Nude Girls bliss.

“ In the face of adversity, we either falter or adapt,” lead singer Arno Carstens shares. “Rolling Thunder’ is a declaration of determination ‘like a bulldozer, like rolling thunder.’ ”

The music video for “Rolling Thunder” was directed by Lionel Smit, a South African artist who pursues his craft in all manner of media with areas dedicated to sculpture, painting and printmaking.

“Working with Lionel was very easy. He made the video like we make songs. Fast, collaborative and fun. I think the video captures that energy perfectly,” Francious Kruger, the band’s drummer explains.

To celebrate and support the release of the new single, Springbok Nude Girls will be streaming the performance in front of a live audience on 31 October, for Halloween, and again on New Year’s Eve, 31 December 2020.

The event will be filmed in front of a live audience at The Daisy Jones Bar at OMG, Summerhill Wine Farm, R44, Stellenbosch.
